The proseminar has the following goals:

- Introduce influential topics, theories, and research that have informed contemporary scholarship on Latin America in various fields.
- Help students develop and refine your own research project in Latin American Studies.
- Help students develop analytical thinking, as well as other practical academic skills.
- Encourage students to take their first professional step/s in a supportive setting.
- Help students navigate the demands of a graduate program.
- Develop a strong group of colleagues who will be your intellectual peers throughout your graduate program at LLILAS.

This course will introduce students to the scholarly work conducted by LLILAS-affiliated faculty in a variety of disciplines. It will also introduce students to research conducted by social scientists outside of the U.S. The course will equip you with some basic theoretical, methodological, and analytical skills necessary for successful participation in a graduate program.

Course Assignments

Reading and Participation: Regular attendance at all class meetings is expected. It is essential that you come prepared to class and that you read carefully, take notes and bring ideas and questions to contribute to and benefit from discussions.

Leading class discussion: For each session, there will be one or two responsible for leading discussion after each faculty presentation.

Forum Responses: In order to help you prepare for each session, student will post 3 questions in CANVAS for each assigned reading before Monday at 10 AM.

Final assignment: As a final project, each student will write an annotated bibliography on the topic of their own choosing (a minimum of twenty sources). You will receive guidance in class on this. As part of this assignment, you will also present briefly to the class about your topic of interest.
